Kenyon International Emergency Services Launches an Online Discussion Board for Emergency Managers, Planners and Disaster Management Professionals

Kenyon International Emergency Services, the world's leading disaster management company, is pleased to introduce its new online Discussion Board for emergency managers, planners and disaster management professionals. The creation of the Discussion Board is in conjunction with the launch of Kenyon's new Emergency Response Training website.

“Disaster management professionals need a vehicle to network online,” said Robert Jensen, President and CEO of Kenyon International Emergency Services. “Our Discussion Board is designed to encourage emergency managers, planners and other disaster management professionals to collaborate with each other to build a vibrant community that is unique to the industry. In today's business environment, there are many emerging challenges professionals must address. The Discussion Board will serve as an exchange of best practices, and facilitate a dialogue to air common problems with possible solutions.”

In addition to facilitating discussions on emergency matters, the Discussion Board also has links to information on upcoming Kenyon training classes and events that can provide additional support for emergency managers and planners.

The Discussion Board can be accessed at <http://www.kenyoninternational.com/forum>.
