Kenyon and Gates & Partners Host Disaster Management Seminars in the UK

Seminars Promote a Coordinated Response to Airline Accidents

London, UK, January 15, 2006 - Kenyon International and Gates & Partners recently held a series of seminars to help improve communications and relations with all parties involved in air accidents. "Responding to airline accidents is a complex issue," said Robert Jensen, President of Kenyon International. "We believe a coordinated air disaster response between Kenyon, legal, airlines, brokers and insurers can drastically improve recovery procedures during an accident. This means working together to improve pre-event planning, understanding roles and defining business procedures, what happens after the accident and the costs involved in the recovery." Jensen also says "At the end of the day, all parties working together will help bereaved families and airline staff, come to closure during a traumatic period."

Kenyon and Gates are also working together to help airlines and insurers with their disaster management planning needs. "Identifying potential problem areas and concerns before an accident is critical for an airline's survival," Jensen said. Kenyon and Gates can help airlines by conducting a comprehensive audit that isolates problem areas from legal to operations and provides recommendations to resolve the issues."
