KENYON INTERNATIONAL AND CRISIS CARE NETWORK JOIN FORCES TO PROVIDE RECOVERY SERVICES AFTER A DISASTER

June 8, 2006 - Kenyon International Emergency Services, Inc., the world's leading disaster management company, and Crisis Care Network, the leading provider of critical incident response services to the workplace, announced they have established an agreement to partner in delivery of psychological first aid during disaster management responses. "Crisis Care Network couldn't be more pleased with this new relationship, said Bob VandePol, President of Crisis Care Network. "Kenyon International is an organization that lives out its mission statement daily by lending truly professional care. We look forward to a global partnership in the delivery of competent compassion."

"Accidents or disasters that result in injuries or death are traumatic experiences for families," says Robert Jensen, President of Kenyon International. "Organizations must have the ability to provide grief counseling to families during times of emergencies. Crisis Care Network provides counselors and experts that can help families cope with a loss of a loved one and help bring resolution to a tragedy."

Kenyon has provided emergency response services since 1929. In addition to providing services for numerous airline accidents, Kenyon has increasingly been engaged to help with non-aviation related disasters. Kenyon assisted in the aftermath of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, including working with the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner of New York City to provide mortuary services for the World Trade Center victims. More recently, Kenyon has completed work for the Louisiana Department of Health and Hospitals to recover the bodies of deceased victims of Hurricane Katrina. Crisis Care Network was also heavily involved in response to 9/11 and the Gulf-area hurricanes and responds nearly 500 times each month to workplace incidents such as robberies, violence, employee death, and catastrophic accidents. A select team of Crisis Care Network Specialists will augment Kenyon's responses with additional support for the families of the deceased.

About Crisis Care Network

Experienced in coordinating the on-site and telephonic response for nearly 25,000 major incidents throughout the U.S., Crisis Care Network was also first in leveraging the power of the internet to develop CrisisCoach -- a completely web-enabled Critical Incident Response Management System. CrisisCoach harnesses the power of the web to ensure that all involved professionals apply "best practices" throughout every phase of service delivery including referral, response and reporting. It also provides all stakeholders with near real-time, on-line access to case progress and outcomes. Following on-site or telephonic interventions, impacted employees can receive feedback from a user-specific assessment, access an expert-reviewed knowledge base of crisis management articles and multimedia presentations, and interact via Q&A and live chat with Critical Incident Response Specialists.
