

KENYON BECOMES INDEPENDENT OPERATING COMPANY

September 1, 2007, Houston, Texas—To better serve the needs of its clients, Kenyon International Emergency Services announced that effective October 1, 2007, it would become an independent operating company. SCI, which has owned Kenyon, will reduce its holdings in Kenyon to 30 percent.

In making the announcement, Robert Jensen, president and chief operating officer, said that over the past several years, Kenyon has invested millions of dollars in facilities and technology to ensure that its clients were receiving state-of-the-art support to supplement their own disaster management resource needs.

“As a result,” Jensen said, “we are better able to support our clients in the event of a crisis. This includes everything from a computerized personal effect system to DNA lab analysis to call center support to the three portable morgues on three continents.”

“All of this is backed up by the oldest continually operating disaster management company in the world and more than 1000 professionals around the world who can be activated if a crisis strikes.”
